This is to be worked on and shaped to my liking

You have a fantastic foundation here. For an intercultural communication presentation, the secret to making these points punchy is moving away from just “raw numbers” and focusing on the so-what factor—how these elements actually impact human behavior, power dynamics, and professional relationships.

Since you just looked into Hofstede’s Cultural Dimensions, we can anchor your ideas directly into that framework to give them massive academic weight and practical clarity. Elevating Your Current Points 1. Language: From “Counting” to “Socio-Political Power”

Your Angle: Number of languages spoken.

How to give it power: Don't just list the numbers; contrast Hyper-Fragmentation with Bipolar Dynamic

Cameroon: Features over 250 indigenous languages alongside an official English/French bilingual

Sri Lanka: Dominated primarily by two major localized languages-Sinhala and Tamil-with English a

Presentation Punchline: Language in Cameroon is a vast mosaic used to navigate hundreds of micro

2. Ethnic Groups: Mosaic vs. Majoritarianism

Your Angle: Number of ethnic groups.

How to give it power: Focus on how ethnic distribution changes collaboration.

Cameroon: A true ethnic mosaic (Bamileke, Beti, Fulani, Sawa, etc.) where compromise and coaliti

Sri Lanka: A majoritarian structure (Sinhalese form roughly 75% of the population, alongside p

Presentation Punchline: Professional dynamics in Cameroon require managing highly decentralized

3. Social Fabric & Identity: The Nature of Collectivism

Your Angle: Family, community ties, and how self-perception works.

How to give it power: Both nations score incredibly high on Hofstede’s Collectivism, but the anchors of their collectivism are different.

Cameroon (Lineage & Kinship): Identity is rooted in the extended family and ancestral village r

Sri Lanka (Devotion & Hierarchy): Collectivism is deeply intertwined with religious frameworks

Presentation Punchline: A Cameroonion professional identifies heavily with their regional line

4. Communication: Reframing the “Broad” Topic

Your Angle: How people talk and interact.

How to give it power: Narrow this down specifically to High-Context vs. Low-Context and Saving Face.

Both cultures are High-Context, meaning how something is said matters more than the literal wo

In both Cameroon and Sri Lanka, open confrontation or a blunt "no" in a professional setting is

New Power Points to Add

To round out your presentation slide, here are two highly relevant professional dynamics to introduce:
Power Distance in the Workplace

The Contrast: Both cultures respect hierarchy, but express it differently. In Sri Lanka, respect for Time Orientation (Fluid vs. Structured)

The Contrast: Both cultures skew heavily Polychronic (relationship-driven time over rigid schedules)
